SPEED KILLS

Dead man's curve. The Amtrak train that derailed Tuesday night, leading to at least seven deaths and 200 people being hospitalized, was traveling at 106 mph — double the speed limit — before it jumped the tracks. Officials marveled that so many people walked away from the torn steel wreckage. PAGE 02

Train braked on curve at 106 mph before crash

Derailment. Investigators begin probe of massive accident as some of the seven fatalities are identified.

Amtrak Northeast Regional Train 188 was traveling at twice the posted speed limit when it derailed Tuesday night, killing at least seven people, officials said.

But Robert Sumwalt, a member of the National Transportation Safety Board, declined to comment on the cause of the crash at a press conference Wednesday night.

Sumwalt said the train's engineer applied an emergency brake while the train traveled at 106 mph toward a left turn. Seconds later, the train, with seven cars and one engine, slowed to 102 mph. At that point the locomotive's black box data recorder cut out.

At least 23 people remain hospitalized at Temple University Hospital — eight of them critically — after the New York City-bound Northeast Regional train went off the tracks Tuesday at about 9:30 p.m.

The engineer applied the brakes while the train was on the curve, Sumwalt said.

"To see these cars, these huge metal vehicles turned upside down, one basically almost split in half ... this is a completely devastating situation." Nutter

Philadelphia Mayor Michael Nutter marveled that more people on the train carrying 243 people, 200 of whom were injured, weren't killed.

"To see these cars, these huge metal vehicles turned upside down, one basically almost split in half … this is a completely devastating situation," Nutter said. "It is incredible that so many people walked away from that scene [Tuesday] night."

Six of the deceased were found at the site, among them Justin Zemser, 20, a U.S. Naval Academy cadet; Jim Gaines, 49, of Princeton, New Jersey, an employee of the Associated Press; and Philly tech CEO Rachel Jacobs, 39, The New York Times reported.

Many of those 200 injured were transported to Temple University Hospital, where chief medical officer Dr. Herbert Cushing said doctors were seeing lots of rib fractures, and surprisingly few head injuries.

Rib fractures were a sign that passengers and their belongings "rattled around in the train car a lot," he said.

Cushing expects all of those patients to survive.

It's unclear if the death toll will rise. Officials cautioned Wednesday evening that many more are missing. They will continue to search the wreckage.

Crash. Derailed Amtrak did not have latest safety controls

The rails where an Amtrak train derailed on Tuesday were not governed by an advanced safety technology meant to prevent high-speed derailments, officials familiar with the investigation said on Wednesday.

Positive train control (PTC) automatically slows or even halts trains that are moving too fast or heading into a danger zone. Under current law, the rail industry must adopt the technology by year end.

The cause of Tuesday's crash, in which seven people were killed, has only begun to be investigated. Regulators are examining whether excessive speed led to the derailment on an Amtrak line in Philadelphia.

Amtrak has begun installing components of a PTC system but the network is not yet functioning, federal officials said.

Amtrak did not respond to a call for comment.

"A functioning PTC system should prevent this," said Joseph Szabo, who stepped down in January as administrator of the Federal Railroad Administration.

Federal rules require the national rail network to have an operating PTC system by the end of the year, though there has been a legislative push to extend that deadline by years. REUTERS

Expert: Amtrak still safe despite the Philly crash

Are trains safe?
A greater number of people take the train instead of flying for regional travel.

Tuesday's Amtrak derailment in Philadelphia has stranded commuters up and down the Northeast Corridor, and left travelers on their toes in the wake of the fatal crash.

The crash left seven dead and 200 injured. A preliminary investigation by the National Transportation Safety Board found that the train was traveling more than 100 mph — over twice the speed limit — when it derailed.

Even with an SUV crash in Valhalla in February that killed six people and December 2013's Metro-North derailment in the Bronx that killed four, Robert Paaswell, distinguished professor and director emeritus at City College's University Transportation Research Center, said derailments make the news because they almost never happen.

Bad weather and electrical failures are the usual culprits that shut down northeastern travel, Paaswell said, not devastating crashes.

"Being a passenger and going by rail is extremely safe," Paaswell said, adding that a greater number of people take the train instead of flying for regional travel. "What passengers should be doing is asking Congress to give Amtrak more money to improve infrastructure and have positive train control."

Positive train control is a technology upgrade designed to stop or slow down trains before they crash or derail, and federal law requires the system to be on all passenger and freight trains by the Dec. 31 deadline.

Democrats and Republicans clashed in a hearing on Wednesday morning, with Republicans continuing to advocate for a $260 million cut from Amtrak's budget.

"I think the point is I wouldn't hesitate to go to Penn Station and get on the train today," Paaswell said. "It's a safe way to travel and a quick way to travel."

White House criticizes House GOP for plan for cuts to Amtrak

The White House criticized Republicans in the U.S. House of Representatives for a plan that would cut grants to Amtrak, part of a transportation funding bill that lawmakers were set to consider on Wednesday in the wake of an Amtrak derailment.

The House spending bill for the coming fiscal year would cut Amtrak grants by $252 million from current levels, said Shaun Donovan, director of the White House Office of Management and Budget.

"You're looking at more than a 15 percent cut in investments in Amtrak," Donovan told reporters on a conference call, noting Obama had proposed a boost to Amtrak funding to $2.45 billion, up from current levels of $1.4 billion. Donovan also said the federal investigation into the cause of the derailment is ongoing and cannot be linked to funding levels.

The Amtrak derailment occurred on a heavily trafficked route between Washington, D.C., and New York City. Numerous passengers were foreigners.

At 30th Street Station Tuesday morning, about five dozen passengers received help from the Red Cross after they left area hospitals.

They straggled in just a few at a time as they were released from hospitals.

One woman's feet were stained with the sooty black dust of railroad tracks.

She spoke only French, but was hustled off before media could find a translator.

One man could be seen with his arm in a sling. A woman with him had a brown stain of dried blood on her shirt. They both declined to speak to reporters.

Loa Garcia, a Red Cross worker who speaks Spanish and Portuguese, said she helped one Chilean couple and a Brazilian family of four.

"Most of the survivors have a very somber loom on their face," she said, describing the mood of the survivors, before trailing off. "It's very …"

Dr. Joseph Martin, Drexel University Civil Engineering professor, said the tracks where the accident occurred are among the busiest in the country, with tens of thousands of trains passing over them each year.

"This is so big," Martin said. "Five people died, and it's in a big city. All of that says to the NTSB that you have to use a fine, fine, fine-toothed comb. You have to get this right." (The number of fatalities was increased to seven after the interview.)

The crash occurred on tracks that run through the residential neighborhoods of Port Richmond and Kensington.

On Tuesday night, Ryan Krause, 21, of Kensington, described approaching the scene after the crash to help.

He said he went to a nearby supermarket to buy two cases of water.

"I told them what it was for and they didn't even charge me for it," Krause said. He gave the water out to passengers until police moved him back.

'How am I going to get out of this hole I'm in?'

Survivor. Terror in moments after Amtrak derailment described by Jeff Kutler, one of the people who survived the tragic crash.

Jeff Kutler / DAN KELLEY, METRO

A man headed to Brooklyn on the Amtrak train that derailed Tuesday night in Port Richmond described the horrific experience after being released from a hospital.

Jeff Kutler, who was traveling on Amtrak 188 from Washington, D.C., to Brooklyn, said he was onboard one of the train cars that derailed.

"My experience was speed around the curve, and the train seemingly lifting off the track and tipping and hitting with a thud," Kutler said.

"I got battered around and ended up in some precarious upside-down position, or mostly upside-down position, and when the train came to a stop — because I think it slid for a while — then I started thinking, 'How am I going to get out of this hole I'm in?'"

Kutler then crawled from his seat toward the train car's exit where first responders helped him out.

North Philly. Family says man who hit cops with car had seizure

Rudolph "Blue" Keitt Jr., 47, who hit four district police officers with his car before being shot in the chest by police, was experiencing a seizure, his family says.

"The family does not believe that Mr. Keitt consciously hit the officers or the other vehicles but believe that he was in a state of seizure," said the family's attorney, Brian Mildenberg. Keitt remains in critical condition with a chest wound.

Police were called at 2:16 p.m. to Wagner and Olney Avenue for reports of a car crashed into a wall.

The driver backed up, hit an officer and a fire truck, struck two more officers, continued driving and was shot in the chest while driving into the fourth officer near Stenton and Ogontz streets. He was arrested on the 1900 block of Colonial Street.

Mildenberg said a family friend witnessed the seizure and was seeking assistance when Keitt's car began moving. METRO

Thirty years later, MOVE bombing remembered

MOVE. The 30th anniversary of the Philadelphia tragedy reminds local activists their work is unfinished.

The Osage neighborhood of West Philadelphia was packed Wednesday afternoon as protesters, public figures and the community paid tribute to a dark moment that has clouded the city's history.

Thirty years ago, 11 people died (five of them were children) and 60 homes were destroyed due to the controversial bombing of a predominately black Osage community by local law enforcement. Decades of speculation has suggested that racial bias and police misconduct sparked the incident, leaving many descendants and residents mistrustful of the current justice system.

"MOVE marked the first time that a city bombed itself. … Black lives didn't matter, even in 1985," said Linn Washington, associate professor at Temple.

Washington, who is one of the few remaining reporters that first covered the tragedy on location, remains skeptical about the current local police system. "Ramsey, our police commissioner, is a nice guy but still follows orders. … Police brutality was happening then as it still is today."

Such a sentiment spread throughout the protest that started at 63rd and Osage and carried on peacefully through 38th and Chestnut. Signs displayed solidarity and awareness for the protesters in Baltimore, Ferguson and for those wanting the exoneration of Mumia Abu-Jamal.

One poster was placed out in the front of the crowd and called on nearby drivers to "honk against police brutality."

Devante Gray, 22, creator of the sign, felt that it was his "moral and social obligation to protest today as a young black man."

"I grew up in West Philly all my life and didn't know until recently how much MOVE still affects my area — the injustice is everywhere," said Gray.

Gray, whose family co-owns West Willie Produce at 18 S. 62nd Street, believes it is important that the community around MOVE still reminds others about it "no matter how many cameras and reporters are trying to film the movement."

"It's our community," he proclaimed. "We need to be out here taking back our rights. … The reason the police are not out there bothering us is because we have the cameras here, but that will not stop us from leading our cause to take a stand."

Damage from rioting in Baltimore over the death of a black man from injuries in police custody is estimated at $9 million, a U.S. government survey showed on Wednesday.

The survey by the Small Business Administration found that more than 30 businesses and one home sustained major damage between April 25 and May 3 in unrest sparked by the death of Freddie Gray, 25.

The survey also found 254 businesses and one home experienced minor damage.

Cost

$8.93M

Damages to businesses totaled $8,927,000 and $60,000 to homes, a Small Business Administration spokeswoman said.

Maryland Senator Barbara Mikulski, in a letter on Tuesday also signed by fellow Maryland Democratic Senator Ben Cardin and U.S. Democratic Representative Elijah Cummings, called on the Small Business Administration to help with the creation of disaster centers.

They also urged the agency to come up with a plan to inform business owners who are eligible for benefits about how to apply for disaster loan assistance. REUTERS

Five things you need to know

1 US House eyes narrowing spy access to Americans' personal data

Broad U.S. government powers to collect personal data on Americans, such as travel and financial records, would be curtailed under a bill expected to win approval on Wednesday in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Mostly framed so far as dealing with bulk collection of domestic phone call data, the bipartisan USA Freedom Act addresses activities much broader than phone calls, said government officials and privacy experts.

For instance, they said, the FBI has used the USA Patriot Act, enacted after the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks and court rulings to gather records of hotel stays and international wire transfers by companies such as Western Union.

Under the USA Freedom Act, such powers would remain in place, but investigators' data-collection power would be narrowed to cases where the government sets out tightly targeted "specific selection terms." REUTERS

A Kentucky U.S. Army officer who police believe fatally shot his 11-year-old daughter before killing himself had been involved in a child support dispute with his ex-wife.

The bodies of Lt. Col. John Jonas, 49, and his daughter, Tasha, were found on Monday night in the yard of his home in Vine Grove, west of Fort Knox, Kentucky, police said on Wednesday.

Jonas had been involved in a dispute involving Tasha's mother, Karina Jonas, according to court records and the fundraising site, "GoFundMe," which is raising money to allow Tasha's body to go to her mother in Virginia. REUTERS

A North Carolina man accused of seeking to join Islamic State insurgents fighting in Syria was sentenced on Wednesday to more than 20 years in prison for trying to provide material support to the group.

Second Nepal earthquake. No sign of missing US aid helicopter

A daylong search failed to find a missing U.S. Marine helicopter on Wednesday, a day after the second Nepal earthquake in less than three weeks killed scores and triggered landslides across the Himalayan nation.

The U.S. helicopter was delivering aid in Dolakha, one of the districts hit hardest by both quakes, on Tuesday when it went missing with six Marines and two Nepali soldiers onboard.

Six Nepali helicopters and about 400 soldiers found no sign of the Marine Corps UH-1Y Huey in forested and rugged terrain.

"There is no positive confirmation of any sighting of the aircraft, and we have no communication with them at this moment," said Marines spokeswoman Captain Cassandra Gesecki. She said there was no evidence to indicate a crash.

Roads in Dolakha were cracked and littered with large boulders, a Reuters witness said. In the village of Suspa Kshamawati, 80 percent of the houses were destroyed.

Krishna Budhathoki, 40, now lives in his cattle pen. "We want to be able to build a new home before the monsoon, but there's not enough time to do so now, and how can we build during the rainy season?" he said.

The Canadian Red Cross pulled a nine-member medical team out of Tatopani, which is on the road from Kathmandu to Tibet and was close to the epicenter of Tuesday's earthquake, citing the danger of landslides. REUTERS

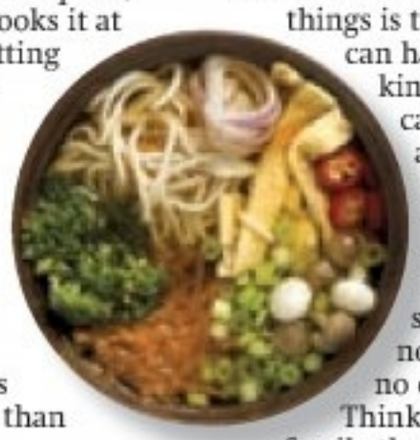
OMG! Real-life Star Trek 'replicator' makes small meals in 30 seconds

Star Trek's food 'replicator,' used to synthesize meals out of thin air, was the envy of sci-fi fans too lazy to cook. Now this culinary fantasy could somewhat become a reality, thanks to a new device that can create the food you crave in 30 seconds. The Genie, which looks like a stylish coffee-maker, can conjure up a varied selection of meals and desserts using little capsules with dehydrated ingredients. Controlled via a smartphone app, the gizmo begins mixing and adding any required liquids from tubes attached to the back of the device to bake or cook the desired dish at the appropriate temperature. Metro spoke to Israeli entrepreneurs Ayelet Carasso and Doron Marco, from the firm White Innovation, about their futuristic kitchen appliance, which is soon to begin distribution to local vendors in Europe and the U.S.

The Genie is quite a small device. How can it prepare real food?

It's just like a coffee machine: You use whatever capsule you like. For example, if you want chicken with rice, you choose the capsule for that and put it into the Genie. It knows which capsules you inserted, adds liquids, mixes and cooks it at the exact setting required. It can even customize to your personal tastes — make it more or less crispy, etc. — and is done in less than a minute.



How many different meals does it do? Does it have limitations with ingredients?

We are working with a few chefs that are making the recipes. We will have an unlimited amount of capsules. We are also working with all kinds of food companies that are making their own branded capsules.

What about those with food allergies? Can it cook some special meals for them?

One of the amazing things is that you can have all kinds of capsules for all types of sensitivity — such as gluten-free, sugar-free, no milk, no eggs, etc. Think about a family that eats the same food: One may need more sugar or vitamins while the others may not. There is no option to do this today, outside of cooking individual meals for everyone, but now the Genie gives you that choice.

Could the Genie help people who are trying to lose weight?

Yes! Obesity is another issue because the nutritionist tells you that you need to eat several small meals throughout the day, but not many people can do it. Here, it's possible for anyone.

I'm trying to imagine the taste, and all I can think of is "synthetic" or "fake."

No, the taste is amazing. It's just like having a chef preparing a meal for you, and you eat it fresh!

The Genie food device. / WHITEINNOVATION.NET

Question

How much will the device eventually cost, and when will it be ready to sell?

For now, we are not putting the Genie on the market for the private consumer. Firstly, we are going to market the device to coffee shop chains, offices and then to private household consumers. In Israel, we'll launch it in the next few months at the cost of several hundred dollars.

1 Vin Diesel gets his own cheating scandal

Vin Diesel is currently weathering his very first infidelity fracas, as the "Furious 7" star is battling claims that he's been stepping out on longtime girlfriend Paloma Jimenez, with whom he has three children. "Vin has a double life," a source tells Life & Style. "About a year ago, he met this girl at a party in NYC. They hit it off, one thing led to another, and before you know it, they were making out. That little fling turned into something more, which lasted for a couple of months. Vin and the woman had a whirlwind romance based on sex. Vin's secret was safe — until now — because the woman was also in a long-term relationship." So, I'm guessing that last bit has changed since Vin's supposed secret doesn't seem so safe anymore. Now, a good "Vin Diesel is leading a double life" story has been a long time coming, but this isn't exactly how I imagined it playing out.

2 Scarlett Johansson is apparently physically perfect

As far as ideals of perfect physical beauty, one from all the way back in ancient Greece seems pretty tough to argue with, yeah? That's at least what lingerie brand Bluebella seemed to be thinking when it checked to see how a bevy of female celebrities stacked up against the "Golden Ratio" of curves (which is 1.618, for all you math nerds out there). And according to this very scientific study, Scarlett Johansson is as "close to physical perfection" as any living celebrity, thanks to her ratio of 1.560. Kim Kardashian came in second while Helen Mirren nabbed third place. Way to go, Helen Mirren! Not that these women aren't gorgeous and all, but honestly I would think a standard of beauty devised by the ancient Greeks would be a bit more, I don't know, boyish?

3 Jennifer Lopez back with Casper Smart

Jennifer Lopez is apparently all about stability these days. Not only did she just announce her first Las Vegas residency — set to start next January at the Planet Hollywood hotel and casino — but she's also reportedly back together with boyfriend Casper Smart. Lopez used Smart as the subject of her most recent "man-crush Monday" on Instagram, even giving him the hashtag "handsome bear." (And really, she should probably not click on that to see how other folks use it, just saying.) Anyway, that's Instagram proof that they're totally back together and ready to wed, yeah?

4 Gwyneth Paltrow has her mom on her side, at least

Proud mama Blythe Danner has a simple message for critics of her daughter, Gwyneth Paltrow: Y'all are just jealous, haters. "I think she's so accomplished that people get kind of intimidated by it. Great cook, great mom, great actress," Danner says of Paltrow during a "Today" show interview. "I am so blessed that I'm old. I know how to get online, [but] I don't know how to Twitter, toot, tweet. I don't know how to do any of it, and I don't look for it because I know so much of it is just trying to sell papers or whatever that's called on the Internet. I know that she's the most extraordinary girl who can do everything." And of course, as Paltrow's mom, she's not at all biased.

Evolution

Interview. Jazz singer Esperanza Spalding introduces her alter ego.

Esperanza Spalding performing at El Rey Theatre in Los Angeles. GETTY IMAGES

Jazz musician Esperanza Spalding is cooking up something pretty special for her latest tour, based on her upcoming album, "Emily's D+ Evolution," but don't ask her to quantify it too much. Asked if she would say Emily is a persona for her, she counters, "I wouldn't say anything. I wouldn't say. I wish people could see it first, and then they could talk about it."

But she is willing to elaborate on what Emily is. "It's like when you put on a play for your parents, with your friends. It's you, obviously, but you're playing other people. So there's a lot of other people, beyond the characters who are passively involved in the stories of each song, but I would say that Emily's the one who I'm pretending onstage to play. She's a version of me through which I'm pretending."

The album is Spalding's first since 2012's "Radio Music Society," for which she won a Grammy. If you're not familiar with her, you might remember the time she won a best new artist Grammy over Justin Bieber, and his fans were not pleased, to say the least. But with all that in the past, she's ready to focus on her new project, which she says "will hopefully come out this year."

She says that the Emily character isn't different from who she is. It is, after all, her middle name. "I was called Emily for a lot of my life by the people closest to me because no one wanted to go through the trouble of 'Esperanza.' So it reminds me of simpler questions and simpler answers to those questions. And it reminds me of a lot of aspects of being in performing that I was curious about until that kind of fell by the wayside to becoming an evolved human being, an evolved adult."

Don't expect her to play too many of her older standards during this show, though she hasn't totally dropped her earlier work. "I do a lot of gigs still with all kinds of repertoire from previous projects, so it doesn't really feel like I'm leaving it aside. It's like if you were on a TV series and then you did a play. It's not really walking away from anything or leaving anything, but I'm excited for all the new frontiers in this direction. It's challenging for me and it's new for me," explains Spalding.

New jazz fans

On being influential

Asked if she thinks about a sense of responsibility since she might be some people's entry point into jazz, she quickly demurs. "No, that just happened because a lot of my stuff isn't very jazzy, and I was younger and prettier than other artists, and we live in this beauty-centric, youth-centric culture. Young people are used to being fed that information through that medium of young and beautiful."

She goes on to explain, "Some people say that about me, and I appreciate why they do. Part of the reason, unfortunately, that young people who aren't into jazz like my music is probably because a lot of it doesn't really sound like jazz. But maybe if they would follow me into the realms of my life that are very jazz-based, they'd get exposed to some more real jazz. But maybe not."

'ASSASSIN'S CREED' FINALLY GETS A FEMALE CHARACTER

Evie Frye will be the first playable female character in the "Assassin's Creed" franchise. / UBISOFT

This week, we learned that the newest "Assassin's Creed" game, "Assassin's Creed: Syndicate," will have a playable female character. Fans of the franchise will likely recall that when the last edition of the game, "Assassin's Creed: Unity," came out, it had none. None that were playable, that is. They'll also remember exactly what angered many fans: Developer Ubisoft's creative director, Alex Amancio, said that it was too hard to put in a playable female character. "It's double the animations. It's double the voices, all that stuff, and double the visual assets. Especially because we have customizable assassins. It was really a lot of extra production work," he said. Yeah, ladies are so hard to draw. So much extra work!

Female fans of the franchise, and no small number of men, were outraged. Difficult or not, it showed a complete tone-deafness to the number of female gamers out there (not to mention male gamers who just wanted another option). It's kind of like the "Avengers: Age of Ultron" toy set that replaced Black Widow in her own motorcycle scene with Captain America. Seriously, Marvel?

According to a recent study by the Entertainment Software Association, women make up 48 percent of gamers. That's almost half the market! People in the gaming community spoke out about their disappointment. We wrote articles. We tweeted. We wrote the company. And you know what? Something changed.

This time around, we get to go back and forth between playing as twins Jacob Zenger and Evie Frye, with each getting equal time. We're also going to see quite a number of female villains.

And you know what? The world isn't going to end. Despite the venom about the insistence on playable female characters on social media, games haven't gone all pink and sparkly. Adding playable female characters to "Call of Duty: Black Ops III" didn't also add fatigues with the option for bedazzling. "World of Warcraft" has managed to live on with female characters for years. "Dragon Age," "Star Wars: Knights of the Old Republic," "Destiny" — they all did it, and no one perished in a glitter bomb apocalypse. We all just had more options.

I write this because speaking out matters, no matter how much flack you get for it. Eventually, if we're loud enough, people listen. A very loud 48 percent of the market is going to make you stand up and take notice. Hear that, Marvel?

M. Night is scaring on the small screen now

Interview. The director is taking his trademark suspense skills to TV in "Wayward Pines."

GETTY IMAGES

With all the movie star talent heading to the small screen, it was only a matter of time before directors started following them. The biggest name to do so recently? M. Night Shyamalan of "The Sixth Sense" fame. He's turning to television with "Wayward Pines," an eerie 10-part series adapted from the Blake Crouch novels, starring Matt Dillon. Metro caught up with Shyamalan to learn more about his new TV series, which has a bit of a "Twin Peaks" feel.

Why did you decide to do a TV show?
I wanted to do a TV show a long time ago. Blake Crouch wrote an incredible story. In movies, you have to get to the answers as quick as you can. But TV allows me to tease the audience.

How do you introduce the unknown?
If you look at film, the old structure is first act, second act, third act. That's what it used to be. It worked. But this isn't the case any longer. If an accident hasn't happened, the audience gets impatient. It's like a chorus in a pop song. Right now, it's about 18 minutes setting up viewers. Something must happen every 18 minutes. Or people would say: "It's boring! Nothing ever happened!" And now the third act is much longer. Did you notice that in a comic book movie, the third act is about 60 minutes? There are no more first acts in movies. But I love the first act. So TV gives me an opportunity to show the characters in the first act so the audience can live with them.

What drew you to "Wayward Pines"?
There's a balance in the way Blake Crouch lays out the mystery, the kind of David Lynch humor, and ultimately the answer is well-grounded, provocative, a big idea and has moral implications. I was like, "Wow, I love it." I chose Matt Dillon because he is like John Travolta. I wanted to take his iconic status and then crush it. And I wanted somebody who hasn't been on TV before. And Matt can play that David Lynch humor.

Speaking of David Lynch, he refused to do the third season of "Twin Peaks." Maybe he is afraid of "Wayward Pines"?
No, no, no. [Laughs] David Lynch is afraid of nothing! Rightly so. For me, David Lynch is like a god. When I'm writing a new script, I have two Blu-rays on my desk. One is "Blue Velvet" by David Lynch. And the other one is "Tie Me Up! Tie Me Down!" by Pedro Almodovar. There is a huge difference between "Wayward Pines" and David Lynch movies. In David Lynch movies, that's the way he sees the world. In "Wayward Pines," they're acting like they're in a David Lynch movie. And that's the big idea.

TV careers

A permanent change?

The "Sixth Sense" has become something of a calling card for you. Is that part of the reason you felt it was time to try something new?
Of course I still love "The Sixth Sense." And the second one I like the most is "Unbreakable." These were children-oriented movies now being judged by 40-year-old males. You want me to keep making that? I get that. We all are guilty. We want the same day over and over again. ... As long as it's about characters and I have the ability to be dark, I'll be happy.

So it could be the start of your relationship with TV.
It could be, you never know. That's something I learned. You shouldn't have an agenda. You should just be in a moment.

Matt Dillon goes sci-fi

Interview. The actor tries the genre world, courtesy of M. Night Shyamalan.

Matt Dillon's Ethan Burke tries to figure out what's going on in the premiere of "Wayward Pines," tonight at 9 on Fox. / ED ARAQUEL, FOX

"Wayward Pines" is the kind of show that doesn't benefit from too much explanation before you dive into it. It's about a man, Ethan Burke, who, after a car accident, finds himself trapped in a strange town (the titular piney paradise), and he can't figure out how to escape it or why everyone in it is acting so darn weird. Meanwhile, his family, still outside the town, struggles to figure out where he's gone to. The series was created by "Sixth Sense" director M. Night Shyamalan, and Matt Dillon stars as Burke, alongside a pretty talented cast of co-stars including Juliette Lewis, Carla Gugino, Terrence Howard and Melissa Leo. We chatted with Dillon about just why small towns are so creepy.

The show seems to work in multiple genres. What would you say it is at the beginning of the season?
The beginning of the show? Very much the atmosphere of a thriller, but then it really goes into the genre of sci-fi.

How would you describe Burke?
He's a veteran in the Secret Service. He's very dedicated to his job and to his family. And when we find him in the story, he's been struggling with his own post-traumatic stress, which has caused him to have threatened his marriage. I would describe him as someone who's been reckless in his life. That might be one of the things that I would say is consistent with who Ethan is — he's been reckless at times.

Does that reckless quality serve him well once he's in Wayward Pines?
I do think there's an element — like people who are manic or have had these sort of episodes make bad decisions a lot. These particular circumstances are so absurd, where he is in this town that appears to be fake, not a real place. He has to do things differently. He has to because he's being stonewalled.

GETTY IMAGES

What is it about small towns that seems to inspire stories about strange events happening under the surface?
It has to do with subtext. There's the difference between the undercurrent and what's really happening. So you can dive in somebody's water, and it can seem really calm and then underneath, there's currents that are really flowing. That's why there's always been a fascination with these small towns.

That 'Sixth Sense' guy

Had you seen some of Shyamalan's earlier work before?
Not most of it, but a lot of it. I was a fan.

He's good at building up the anticipation that a thriller like this needs.
Yeah, he is. The thing that I liked about his films is there's a verisimilitude to the characters, there's a truthfulness to those people. They seem real and honest to who they are. That was my big thing on the show. I wanted to make sure there were times I would say, "Well, would Ethan really do that?" I would mark that in the script saying, "Really? Why? How Come? Really?" And those are good things to do. You don't have to have the answers, but the questions are important.

Rival Sons' quest for honesty

Rock. Lead singer Jay Buchanan tells us why being in a rock band isn't about the girls, money or attention for him.

Rival Sons' bluesy, pure rock 'n' roll sound has broad appeal, with fans ranging from hard-core rockers to hipster kids sick of listening to The Black Keys on repeat. But lead singer Jay Buchanan says he doesn't play for any of the hundreds of fans in the audience.

"I play for the band," he tells us. "Music is such an intense affair. There's so much energy swirling around on stage or in the studio. You have to serve the song first and because that is so consuming; the audience is an afterthought."

Lightning in a bottle

The foursome are currently on tour promoting their album "Great Western Valkyrie," which came out last summer. "It was a difficult record to make because we did it at such an intense, frantic pace," says Buchanan.

The band purposely didn't write any of the songs until they were all in the studio together. "We go in there with nothing and then create a force," he explains. "We capture that energy, an honest snapshot of that moment. That immediacy and energy is really a keystone for Rival Sons."

Wanting a reaction

To Buchanan, being a musician means being a storyteller. "People have always told stories through song, and the melody is a way for people to remember every detail — it's the candy coating of the message," he says. He scoffs a bit at artists who try to take away from that.

Authenticity remains the most important aspect to the singer. "When I'm making music or listening to music, I'm really just trying to find the truth," he says. "I'm just trying to find something that's going to make me feel something I didn't feel before."

emily.laurence@metro.us

Playing well with others

Learning to compromise

Buchanan started his music career as a solo artist, playing with Rival Sons on the side, but went all in about seven years ago. "I've never allowed myself to compromise so much, ever," he says of being in a band. "But there's something so beautiful in collaboration. I would have missed out on so many beautiful, creative moments."

WHERE TO EAT, DRINK & PLAY

A taste of summer

We'll never give up our roast pork sandwiches, but sometimes the season calls for something lighter — like a lobster roll.

RACHEL VIGODA

Oyster House

1516 Sansom St.
It's a standoff to rival Pat's vs. Geno's: Should lobster rolls be hot or cold? You have a choice at Oyster House, which has been serving up seafood since 1947 (if you haven't been more recently, go to check out the sleek renovations). The menu features lobster rolls chilled New England style or warmed Connecticut style.

Luke's Lobster

130 S. 17th St.
It's all lobster, all the time at this small, casual spot in Rittenhouse. The founder, Luke Holden, was born and raised in the lobster capital Maine. In his simple-yet-delicious version of the sandwich, the lobster is served chilled on a buttered, toasted, split-top bun with a bit of mayo, lemon butter and "secret spices."

Pennsylvania 6

114 S. 12th St.
Once you're settled into a plush red booth at this chic 1940s-style spot you'll want to start with selections from the raw bar and an order of the house specialty: salty, savory, decadent roasted bone marrow. Follow that up with the lobster roll, made with celery, green onion and mayo on a buttered roll, with a side of duck fat fries.

Bonefish Grill

160 N. Gulph Road, King of Prussia
A new addition to the suburbs — and the largest restaurant in this seafood chain — Bonefish Grill specializes in fresh fish cooked over a wood-burning grill. But don't worry: If tilapia or Chilean sea bass isn't your thing, the menu also includes a classic lobster roll, served with French fries and coleslaw.

Lacroix

210 W. Rittenhouse Square
Put on your Sunday best for lunch at this posh restaurant in The Rittenhouse hotel. The lobster in this version is diced up, instead of in large chunks, and the emphasis is as much on the bacon-mayo dressing as on the seafood. It's served on a split-top bun, with a side of tarragon potato chips made in house.

Your culinary game plan

- On the boardwalk, head to the hot dog stand for bacon knockwursts and fondue-topped fries.
- When you're buying a fried chicken sandwich at PortFedNuts, grab a cold-brewed iced coffee and, for dessert, cinnamon sugar donuts.
- From Chifa, expect easy-to-nibble savory treats like glazed pork ribs, pork belly bao buns and chicken wings with spicy garlic-ginger sauce.
- Salute the S.S. Franklin Fountain while you dig into a "waffle boat" sundae.

The food lineup at Spruce Street Harbor Park

Spruce Street Harbor Park opens for the season on May 22, with a preview party ($20) on May 21. MATT STANLEY

Come hungry to Philly's new favorite summer spot, back for a second year.

A.D. AMOROSI
letters@metro.us

When the Delaware River Waterfront Corporation opened the pop-up Spruce Street Harbor Park last June, it quickly turned into a popular summertime version of the Winterfest at Blue Cross RiverRink next door. A manmade beach with a boardwalk, lush green landscaping and rows of hammocks turned Harbor Park into summer's hottest hit.

Food and drink were available for sale throughout the sprawling space, on a set of floating barges and inside stationary shipping containers repurposed into oversized culinary kiosks helmed by Iron Chef Jose Garces and concessionaire Dan Rivera. But it still wasn't enough for us.

Feedback to the DRWC included complaints that there weren't enough food options beyond small snacks. "There was an active search for restaurateurs last summer, but creating partnerships was difficult with a park that hadn't been tested yet," says the DRWC's Emma Fried-Cassorla.

PortFedNuts will be serving up fried chicken sandwiches. PROVIDED

This year, the park will open on May 22, with a lot more to eat.

Eric and Ryan Berley, the quirky brothers behind Franklin Fountain and Shane Confectionery, will set up several sweet riverfront outposts, including the S.S. Franklin Fountain, a shipping container done up like a World War II battleship. Over in the Lodge, near the ice rink-turned-roller skating rink, Shane Confectionery will sell salt water taffy, fudge and cotton candy.

Garces Group is back, bringing more options like Village Whiskey burgers and a version of the chef's (now-closed) Peruvian-Chinese restaurant, Chifa. Along the boardwalk, the Garces crew will offer Chicago-style hot dogs and sausages (a riff on the Abe Froman concept Garces had long promised for Midtown Village, but never opened). On weekends, the Distrito taco truck will be cooking up Mexican food.

Also on the boardwalk: PortFedNuts, a summer-only spot from the Federal Donuts team, with a special spin on its usual chicken and donuts menu. "People have been asking us for a fried chicken sandwich forever, so this is a natural," says Federal Donuts co-owner Steve Cook. "We really wanted to bring something special to Harbor Park."

Mockumentaries have come before and after, as well as movies lampooning rock stars, but few have hit all the buttons quite so well as 1984's "This Is Spinal Tap," a film not just about a very stupid fictional band falling hilariously apart, but the slow burnout of a whole genre of over-the-top '70s arena rock.

This 1945 film by Marcel Carné, often cited as one of the masterpieces of French cinema, depicts the theater world of Paris in the 1820s and '30s. It centers on the courtesan Garance and the four very different men who wish to win her hand: a mime, an actor, a criminal and an aristocrat.

G. Farrel Kellum's sculptures draw inspiration from hip-hop in its sonic as well as visual aspects. Bright, raw and bombastic, his pieces pulse synesthetically with a street-pounding rhythm. If the colors remind us of old school hip-hop flavor, this is no accident, since Kellum is additionally concerned here with how we imagine hip-hop's history.

INSIGHT GUIDES

TRAVEL WEEKLY

WWW.INSIGHTGUIDES.COM TRAVEL WEEKLY, PHILADELPHIA, THURSDAY, MAY 14, 2015.

The cultural side of Costa Rica

More bird species have been seen in Costa Rica than in the US and Canada combined. But there's also a rich cultural heritage in the country, with many world-class museums in the capital, San Jose.

One of the best is the Museum of Pre-Colombian Gold (Museo del Oro Precolombino), in an underground building below the Plaza de la Cultura. Despite its small size, it has an impressive collection of over 1,600 items — ranging from the country's first coins to a life-size gold warrior — with many exquisitely beautiful creations in between.

The Costa Rican Art Museum (Museo de Arte Costarricense) is free and housed in a former airport terminal building at the entrance to La Sabana Metropolitan Park. It tells the history of the nation's art from the earliest beginnings of Costa Rica through to the present day, with a good coverage of modern artists. If you want to see more about Costa Rica's current art scene, visit the Museum of Contemporary Art and Design (Museo de Arte y Diseno Contemporaneo), which also covers international art with a special emphasis on Central America.

The National Museum (Museo Nacional de Costa Rica), housed in the 1917 Bellavista Fortress, covers the history of the country through to the present day, with many artifacts including pre-Colombian items. Information is in both Spanish and English and a surprise delight is the butterfly and tropical plant garden attached to the museum.

The Jade Museum (Museo del Jade "Marco Fidel Tristan Castro") is in fact an archaeological museum which also has the world's largest collection of pre-Colombian jade. The displays spread over five floors and are well worth seeing. The Children's Museum (Museo de los Ninos) isn't just for children. It's a world-class museum with a vast collection exploring all aspects of modern life. Don't miss the earthquake simulator — both fun and frightening.

These are just a handful of the many San Jose museums worth seeing and which fully justify a stay of several days in Costa Rica's capital.

ALL PHOTOS CORBIS WINGATE/APA PUBLICATIONS

Three museums outside the capital

The Museum of Popular Culture

Near Heredia, a few miles north of San Jose, this museum has a small but enjoyable collection of items about domestic life in Costa Rica. It also hosts events and classes.

Selvatura Butterfly Garden and Insect Museum

The Selvatura Park has an outstanding butterfly garden with over 50 different species, and the remarkable Insect Museum has over a million specimens and is one of the largest of its kind in the world.

Orosi Church and Religious Museum

The church was built in 1743 and is the oldest Catholic church still in use in Costa Rica. The museum is small but sheds a fascinating light on the religious history of this town in the beautiful Orosi Valley.

Hidden gem: Onancock, Virginia

You'll find galleries, restaurants, live theater and romantic B&Bs in many places — including this tiny fishing village on Virginia's Eastern Shore.

The town is Onancock, with a population of about 1,500. Once a port for steamboats plying the Chesapeake Bay, it drifted into obscurity when that era ended — until entrepreneurs, artists and corporate refugees revitalized it. Onancock has urban amenities with wetland views and bay breezes.

Park your car and forget it; walking is the way to get around. You'll want to get closer looks at the Victorian ladies, including B&Bs like the Colonial Manor Inn and the Inn at Onancock, that line the streets.

Artists and artisans are inspired by the region's light and atmosphere. You'll find traditional sailboats-at-sunset paintings and tapestries exploding with colorful abstract designs. During monthly Second Fridays, studios stay open late. The Red Queen Gallery showcases local artists and high-end crafts in a light-filled, cheerful space, and Jack Richardson's Fine Art displays his oils along with works by other artists.

The theater scene is at the North Street Playhouse. The year-round schedule is an eclectic mix of stage plays, one-night readings, dance, revues and new productions. The restored 1950s-era Roseland Theatre hosts the International Film Series on the second Thursday of the month, highlighting foreign films.

Outdoors, SouthEast Expeditions provides guided kayak tours through the marshes to find waterfowl, wildlife — and wine. The "paddle and sip" trips visit area wineries via kayak. Hop on the ferry to tiny Tangier Island, one of only two inhabited islands in the Chesapeake. Book early to stay at a B&B. The seafood on the island was probably swimming in the bay that morning.

Park your car and forget it for the weekend. Walking is the way to get around in Onancock.

Back on the mainland, Mallards has water-view dining. Market Street Grill, Bizzotto's, Charlotte Hotel and Restaurant, and The Inn and Garden Cafe are all good choices. INSIGHT GUIDES | FRAN SEVERN

Artist Stephen Huneck and his wife Gwen created a playground for dogs and a place to remember lost pets at Dog Mountain in St. Johnsbury.

The 150 acres surrounding the late artist's studio are dedicated to dogs. There are fields for romping, trails for hiking, ponds for splashing and mud for rolling around in. Leashes are forbidden, and canines and humans can visit 24/7.

In 2000, Huneck built the Dog Chapel. It's a small-scale, typically New England-style church with a steeple and stained glass windows — the subjects are dogs, of course — but there are no pews. Huneck wanted it to be a place where people could bring their living pets and have a place to reflect on the dogs who have crossed the Rainbow Bridge. Every space on the walls is covered with photos and remembrances of beloved dogs.

Huneck's studio sells his dog-inspired woodcuts to support the Mountain (www.dogmt.com).

Smoking a lucrative business — for the state

Re: 'Smoke, butts should be banned' (Metro, May 11) If the state were to ban smoking in public, indoor smoking has completely ended, then smoking would cease to exist. Letter writer Geoffrey Palmer may be happy about this at the moment, but when the state needs to make up for all the missing taxes, I'm sure he won't be happy to pay the extra money. Smokers pay tens of millions of dollars in taxes to the state. I think it might be cheaper for Mr. Palmer to cross the street if the smoke is bothering him, or he will need to dig deep into his pockets. L. BARKLEY

We'd all like to stay home with the kids

Re: 'Moms need money' (Metro, May 13) Do you have an idea of the number of mothers (single and not) who "want to stay home with their child" but are unable to? Do you have any idea of the number of mothers who don't qualify for any aid because their minimum-wage jobs have them making a few cents more than allowed when receiving assistance? Did you ever think maybe people should be grateful that there is any FREE assistance out there instead of pissing and moaning that they "should be able to stay at home with their child" instead of working? Eagles make hire

The Eagles named Dwayne Joseph director of pro personnel Wednesday. Joseph worked for the Dolphins and the Bears. Joseph, an African-American, was hired by Kelly in the wake of LeSean McCoy's accusations of racism. They also promoted Louis Clark to senior director of pro personnel.

3 Things to watch during the Sixers' offseason

NBA. With a good offseason, the 76ers can get close to being ready to compete.

Now it gets interesting. The 2014-15 regular season was maddening in so many ways with an 18-64 record and the 76ers featuring 25 players and 41 different starting lineups.

Two years ago, the Sixers won 19 games. Do the math, and it adds up to 37 wins in two seasons.

The Sixers aren't likely to reach 37 wins next season, but it should be better than each of the past two seasons. Here are three hot items to look for in this offseason, which will continue to shape the future of the franchise:

ANDY JASNER

Embiid will finally take the court this summer. / ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

1 Embiid in the Summer League

Joel Embiid is expected to play in the Summer League. That's huge. Like Nerlens Noel the year before, Embiid sat out an entire season. He slowly seemed to make progress, but there was a report that his conditioning wasn't where it needed to be, and he clashed with trainers.

The Sixers need Embiid to be 100 percent healthy and in terrific shape for the rigors of the NBA. If that happens, the Sixers will be automatically better with Embiid and Noel playing together. It will be fun to watch. The Summer League will be vital for Embiid in terms of playing in 5-on-5 games.

2 The NBA Draft Lottery

The Sixers will be involved in the NBA Lottery on May 19. They have a 15.6 percent chance of grabbing the first pick if the ping pong balls fall their way. Ideally, they'd like to finish first, though anywhere in the top three would work out well.

The Sixers have landed the first overall pick just once. Remember? It was 1996, and they took Allen Iverson. If the Sixers can draft Kentucky's Karl-Anthony Towns or Duke's Jahlil Okafor, they'll automatically have another asset.

There are other good players available in the top 10 though there doesn't appear to be a franchise-changing player. Still, this is how you take the next step — by adding solid pieces.

COULD THE 76ERS AFFORD TO PASS UP ANOTHER BIG MAN, LIKE OKAFOR, WITH A NO. 1 PICK?

Noel's sophomore pressure

Noel had a very good rookie season though he lost out to Minnesota's Andrew Wiggins for Rookie of the Year. It's the second season in the NBA that can be tricky. The other teams have seen you, and now it comes down to executing.

Noel needs to return in even better shape with improvement shown in all aspects of his game. He began to drive to the basket with his left hand quite nicely by the end of the season. Having a go-to move for a young player is a bonus.

Noel will also need to coexist with Embiid, which won't happen overnight. Trading Jrue Holiday for Noel a couple of years ago looked like a risk, but it may not be in the long run. Noel got so much better by the end of his rookie season. His sophomore season in the NBA will be more challenging. All the skills are there for Noel to succeed.

An argument can be made that Noel's rookie season was actually better than Michael Carter-Williams', the 2013-14 Rookie of the Year.

NFL. Eagles propose rule changes to point after touchdown

The NFL's spring meetings will commence next week in San Francisco, and the powers that be in the biggest sports league in the world will consider three proposals that could change how extra points work in the upcoming season.

The Eagles, Patriots and the competition committee each submitted ideas on how to make the "gimmie" that is the PAT more exciting, according to the Associated Press.

They also hope to make it a more important part of the game, as players routinely risk injury during a play that is more or less inconsequential.

The Eagles have suggested that the ball be snapped at the 15-yard line for the kick (as opposed to the 2-yard line) and that two-point conversion attempts be moved up to the 1-yard line. They also suggest that a returned fumble or interception count as two points for the defensive team. New England's idea is the same, without the defensive scoring opportunity.

The proposal from the competition committee is the same as the Eagles', with the two-point attempt still at the 2-yard line.

Tim Tebow / GETTY IMAGES

The move to the 1-yard line could be a valuable change for Chip Kelly and the Birds. Kelly is known for aggressive play — particularly during his college days in Oregon.

He also recently acquired Tim Tebow, a player whose value could be increased by a multitude with the change.

A three-fourths majority (24 owners) is needed for the rule to change.
